About members

When you join a non-profit, democratic organization you immediately receive all the rights that the other members have, and the same obligations.

A Member's rights:

To join the organization on the same terms as all the other members

Participation at the annual meeting

Suggest things for the annual meeting

Vote at the Annual Meeting

To be nominated for the election of Directors, auditor or other posts

See the organization's bylaws, protocol and other documents at any time

Get to know what personal information the organization has about oneself

The possibility to contact the board, auditor and election committee

Get information about what is happening in the organization

A Member's obligations:

Confirm their membership once a year

Update their personal information if they have changed

Pay for membership if required

Follow the statutes and other organization directives

All members should be called for the annual meeting in good time, and have the right to attend, make proposals and vote. This is the most important point when it comes to the member's right to influence the organization. Of course, members can make suggestions at any time during the year, and the more the board asks for its members opinion, the better the organization will function.

If a person has not paid their membership within a reasonable time, or have not updated their personal data and can not be reached, one need not believe that the person is a member for the year in question.

If a person violates the organization's statutes or actively tries to sabotage the organization, the board can have the member temporarily suspended, and then let the Annual Meeting decide whether the person should be excluded or if the suspension to be lifted. Remember that the person in question has the right to defend themselves and be included in the vote for their membership.

When collecting data on members regarding the Personal Data Act, which is to protect public integrity. It means you have to inform members about what their personal data will be used, and not to do anything else with them later. Personal information may be all sorts of information that directly or indirectly can be linked to a physical and living person: address, social security number, shoe size, party photos or anything else.
